MAKE AUDITORIUM GREAT MUSIC HALL

(Continued from First Page.) with which the Director dominated every part being noticed by all. Mr. Mercer received the generous congratulations of the house, when he came forward to direct the choral singing. With band accompaniment in the chorus sang "Old Black Joe" and, gaining courage as they went on, swung into "My Old Kentucky Home" with an enthusiasm, which quite captured the audience. As an encore, the children sang "Maryland," taking the high notes with a clear treble, which in turn brought to the chorus the applause of the members of the band, as well as the audience. After two other selections by the band, in which the skill of Professor Innes and his performers was finely exemplified, the concert closed with the "American Fantasy." In the course of which the band played several popular airs, the children's chorus joining in the "Swanee River," "Dixie" and closing with "America." As the band played the national hymn the children drew forth red, white and blue handkerchiefs, and during the singing waved their colors with patriotic enthusiasm, the band letting itself loose in a final and powerful burst of music, which quite brought the audience to their feet. Great Concert at Night. During an interval in the opening selections, a side door was thrown open, and the Richmond Howlers, in full dress uniform, filed in, being greeted with the cheers of the chorus and the rapturous applause of the audience. Instantly Professor Innes was on his feet, and the band crashed into "Dixie" with a wonderful enthusiasm and abandon. The whole audience rose and gave roll after roll of applause to band, music and soldiers. Reunion Chorus. Professor Mercer took the baton and led the great Reunion Chorus of more voices in a fine rendering of Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus." The unity and precision of the chorus was considered wonderful, in view of the short time they have been drilling together. After a number of band selections the band and chorus united in "The Bridal Chorus" from Wagner. The skill with which the great band was modulated and brought into harmony with the voices was noted by all. Liszt's "Fourteenth Hungarian Rhapsody" again brought forth the applause of the house, and after repeated encores and acknowledgments, Director Innes gave a most humorous rendering of a catchy little air, in which a great variety of instruments in turn played the air, with band accompaniment. The humor of the conception was evident, and none seemed to enjoy it more than Director Innes and the members of his band. One of the features of the evening was the harp solo of Mr. H. J. Williams, whose skilful fingers ran lightly over the strings of his great harp, playing the "Vals Caprice," arranged by himself for a harp solo. He was repeatedly encored. The closing number, a selection of scenes from "Faust," arranged by Gounod, brought out the full quality of the band, and when in closing Director Mercer gave the signal and the great chorus rose and joined with the band in the famous "Soldiers' Chorus," the whole house seemed to sway to the rhythm of that popular air. Work of Singers. After the concert Director Innes expressed himself in the most enthusiastic terms as to the excellent work of the Wednesday Club and the reunion chorus. He said that he had no doubt that to the Wednesday Club was largely due that cultivated taste of Richmond people for good music. The children's chorus also impressed the director. "It is truly remarkable that two such large choruses can be brought together and deliver such high class music on such short notice. It not only shows the musical taste of the people of Richmond, but the excellent work your schools are doing," he declared. Among the alto voices in the chorus last night was Mrs. Frederic Nell Innes, who, although she had never practiced some of the choruses, and had never sung with the Wednesday Club, was able from her knowledge of music to go through her part in excellent style.
